Summer 2006

Note from the Executive Director

Wythe County and Wytheville Community College hosted the New River/Mount Rogers Workforce Investment Board's Economic/Workforce Development Forum on August 15. Following a keynote address by Gary McLaren, Deputy Director of the Virginia Economic Development Partnership, program speakers presented success stories and best practices that involved collaboration of economic development and workforce development practitioners.

Other exciting news includes the implementation of Wythe County's new career coaching program with career coaches assigned to the three middle/high school pairs. The Joint IDA and Wythe Manufacturing Council were instrumental in obtaining a VEC grant to help initiate the program. Also expected to have major long-term influence on Wythe County's workforce and quality of life was the announcement that the Wythe-Bland Community Foundation will provide tuition scholarships to all qualifying Wythe and Bland high school graduates beginning next year. Such focus on workforce development bodes well for Wythe County's continued economic development success.

Workforce Development Initiatives

Workforce preparedness is identified as one of the essential components of economic development, and local plant managers have made it clear that this is a key issue for them. The Wythe Manufacturing Council, an informal association of larger manufacturers in Wythe County, commissioned a white paper last year on local manufacturing workforce development. In response to recommendations in the paper, the Wythe County Board of Supervisors formed an ad hoc committee consisting of representatives of Wythe County Public Schools, Wytheville Community College, the Board of Supervisors, local industry, and the Joint IDA. The committee recommended two specific actions to better position Wythe County's workforce to meet tomorrow's economic realities.

The first initiative was to implement a career coaching program with a career coach assigned to each of the three middle school/high school pairs in the county. Career coaches work with students to make them aware of career options, to help them identify career goals, and to help them identify needed skill sets and required training to achieve those goals.

The second initiative is the creation of a manufacturing technology program at the Wythe County Technology Center. This program will provide students a general well-rounded introduction to the modern industrial world and prepare students for pursuing higher education or for direct entry in the manufacturing sector. These exciting new programs will help keep Wythe County's workforce competitive in the world economy.

Economic/Workforce Development Forum

Held at Wytheville Community College on August 15, the New River/Mount Rogers Workforce Investment Board's Economic/Workforce Development Forum drew about fifty participants from the region and statewide. Speakers covered such topics as Wythe County's workforce initiatives (see next article), Smyth and Washington counties' Dream It! Do It! program, and research analysis tools. Government, education, and business leaders are working aggressively and cooperatively to make workforce development a priority for securing the area's future. The region is fortunate that the Workforce Investment Board and the state are committed partners in this endeavor.

Acrylife and VT Collaborate for Cutting-Edge Product Design

Acrylife, Inc., a Wytheville-based company operating in the Fairview Industrial Park, is an entrepreneurial leader in the roofing business. The company and a team of professors and students at Virginia Tech developed a new vent technology for membrane roofing systems. The new technology eliminates the uplift pressure on membrane roofs experienced during high winds, thereby allowing the roof to withstand hurricane-level winds. Tests at the NASA Full Scale Wind Tunnel demonstrated Acrylife's design effectively holds the membrane in place at wind speeds approaching 80 mph. The membrane Acrylife uses is produced by Haogenplast Israel. A prototype of the roof is already used on the Knowledge Works II building in the Virginia Tech Corporate Research Center. Congratulations to Chuck and Pat Johnson and their team at Acrylife.

Wythe Manufacturing Council News

The Wythe Manufacturing Council held its quarterly meeting at the new Gatorade facility in Progress Park. Following a delicious lunch catered by Smokey's Barbeque, the business program introduced the new career coaches and previewed the new manufacturing technology program planned to begin with the 2007–2008 academic year at the Wythe County Technology Center. The record crowd was briefed by Gatorade manager Arnie Wodtke and toured the new manufacturing facility, which is scheduled to begin production in September. Rodney Coleman, PBG, and Ken Morrow, Brewer Automotive Components, have agreed to serve on the council's steering committee.
